LGBT and abortion: the undeniable links between Soros and USAID

WORLD 21_02_2025

The gulf is widening between Europe and its institutions and the current US administration, which is increasingly determined to purge the lobbies and ideologies that have infected the West over the last decade. Soros has been shown the door by the Trump administration and is entering through the window of the European Parliament. Europe and Brussels not only have a serious problem of lack of respect for freedom of religion and opinion, they have a huge problem of lack of transparency, complicity and evil infiltration in their own institutions that needs to be addressed urgently and decisively.

In Washington, the hard work of Elon Musk's team, in the Department of Government Efficiency (DOGE), is identifying, as US House Speaker Mike Johnson has said, 'fraud, waste and abuse', The revelations about USAid funding confirm the disturbing suspicion of a very close collaboration with the globalist philanthropies that have polluted the West with the imposition of deified environmentalism, the trivialisation and liberalisation of the murder of the innocent in the womb, gender ideology and the deprivation of religious freedom and the right of parents to choose education.

The Open Society Foundations, according to the Heritage Foundation's Daily Signal, have funded many of the left-wing groups that have provided staff and advice to the Biden administration. Although the Open Society Foundations recently stated that it does not receive funding from USAid or coordinate USAid funding, its links to USAid are undeniable. In 2001, the network of Soros foundations listed USAid among its 'donor partners', along with other government aid agencies in countries such as the UK, Sweden, Canada, the Netherlands, Switzerland, Germany and Austria. Not only did Open Society fund the same projects as USAid, but its leaders met several times with former USAid administrator Samantha Power. USAid and Open Society Foundations jointly funded the Organised Crime and Corruption Reporting Project, an organisation that attacked several conservative leaders around the world for criticising Soros and published the document that led to Trump's first indictment.

The Open Society Foundations or their partners, the Open Society Policy Center,the Open Society Institute or the Foundation to Promote Open Society, together withUSAid, have funded the American Civil Liberties Union, which is pro-immigration, pro-LGBTI and pro-abortion and has various branches in every country in the Westernworld), the NAACP Legal Defense Fund and the Southern Poverty Law Center (which haspromoted the worldwide discrediting of many Christian pro-life and pro-family NGOsand supported the actions of federal police agencies against American Catholics and conservatives), various human rights campaigns or rather initiatives for the promotion and global dissemination of gender ideology, and the Sierra Club (which has promoted climate alarmism).

USAid has had links not only with the Open Society Foundations: for example, Rajiv J. Shah, president of the Rockefeller Foundation, part of the network that has funded several climate activist groups and supports several abortion multinationals, previously headed USAid under President Barack Obama. Similarly, the Rockefeller Foundation's chief of staff, Mike Muldoon, and its vice president for innovation, Andrew Sweet, have held key roles at USAid, as senior investment manager and senior administrative advisor respectively. Over the last four years, USAid has distributed more than $4.2 billion in grants to 'various foreign recipients', which are difficult to identify at this stage, although USAid's links to the Open Society Foundations, Tides, the Rockefeller Foundation, the Human Rights Campaign, the Center for American Progress, the ACLU and others confirm how these illiberal left-wing groups have acquired immense power in their ability to influence and penetrate at all levels and in every country.

While in the US the Trump administration has vigorously begun the work of cleaning up, increasing transparency and fighting waste, Europe is moving in a very different direction. The European Commission has channelled billions of euros of public money into funding illiberal and left-wing NGOs and think tanks that, far from acting independently, have served as tools to promote centralist political agendas at the expense of conservative governments. This is revealed in a report just published by the MCC Brussels, entitled 'The Commission's Propaganda by Proxy', which exposes programmes such as the 1.5 billion euro Citizens, Equality, Rights and Values (CERV) programme. Officially, this fund is intended to 'strengthen democracy and rights in the EU', but in reality it funds a range of projects with clear propaganda objectives.

The RevivEU project, for example, managed by the EUROPEUM Institute for European Policy, which aims to combat 'Eurosceptic narratives promoted by autocratic elites' in the Visegrád countries (Hungary, Poland, the Czech Republic and Slovakia). This project received 645,000 euros between 2023 and 2024. In addition to these very serious allegations of blatant interference in the civil and democratic life of individual European countries, there is another, possibly even worse. At the head of the 'Special Committee on the European Democracy Shield' (EUDS), recently set up and strongly supported by the von der Leyen Commission, whose political mandate includes all initiatives to counteract harmful interference in the democratic processes of European countries, and which is in fact a censorial 'Big Brother', the French liberal-Macronist MEP Nathalie Loiseau has been elected and who has repeatedly stated is very “proud” to have worked for George Soros’ “think tanks”.
