Pfizer papers, a case of truth suppressed by silence

People are dying for their ideas, but they are also suffering ostracism, which is causing the death of ideas, opinions and facts. The shocking images of Charlie Kirk's murder expose the system's hypocritical narrative, which fuels a witch hunt and gradually labels those who speak out as guilty, fuelling murderous insanity. However, the system has another way of 'killing', albeit metaphorically, those who put forward unpopular ideas: silence and ostracism.

Recently, Naomi Wolf, editor of the monumental work The Pfizer Papers — containing over 450,000 pages of documents detailing Pfizer's clinical trials of the Covid vaccine and proving its failure — visited the European Parliament. The news is not that the journalist was able to speak to MEPs about the book, but that no newspaper reported on it. This is perhaps because Wolf was invited by Christine Anderson, an MEP from the German AfD party, which certainly does not enjoy good press coverage. In Germany, there are even calls to outlaw the party, with the inevitable accusation that it is neo-Nazi. Yet the content of Naomi Wolf's book is sensational and disruptive; the subtitle does not hesitate to make the serious accusation of 'crimes against humanity'.

Just over thirty MEPs attended the presentation, which is decidedly few for an event of this magnitude. This was the first time that the European Parliament addressed the second instalment of Pfizergate, i.e. the scandal surrounding the text messages exchanged between President Ursula von der Leyen and Pfizer CEO Albert Bourla.

There has also been no news of repercussions on the work of the European Parliament following the presentation. A muffled silence has fallen over the event, blending with the surrounding noise of political propaganda that the press manages to publish daily.

Yet Wolf's words were truly disconcerting. So too are the words in the introduction to the work, produced by 3,250 volunteer scientists who examined all the available reports after American judges decided to declassify the substantial volume of communications between the pharmaceutical giant and the FDA. In fact, it is the numbers that reveal the truth of the operation conducted by Naomi Wolf, coordinated by project manager Amy Kelly, and delivered in monthly instalments of 55,000 pages. This operation is destined to be both sensational and covered up. At least in the Old Continent.

This was made possible thanks to Wolf's tenacity. Her CV certainly cannot be classified as MAGA or right-wing: her past as an advisor to Bill Clinton and Al Gore places her firmly on the opposite side of the political spectrum, on the left. However, as she herself writes, 'I was saddened that the left, which should have been defending feminism, seemed completely unconcerned about the serious risks to women and unborn children after the vaccine was administered'. The reports reveal not only the adverse effects already known to affect the cardiovascular and neurological systems in a 'catastrophically serious' sequence of damage, but also 'destructive interference with the human reproductive system'.

'The most terrible discovery is not about the side effects we have already heard about,' Wolf told the European Parliament, 'but the fact that the whole logic of the vaccine has been built around an attack on the human reproductive system.' Midwives have reported placental destruction, premature births and severe haemorrhaging in women, as well as a 40% increase in maternal mortality in Western countries. Pfizer knew perfectly well that nanoparticles penetrate the testicles of males while they are still in the womb.

Thus, evidence shows that, of the 270 pregnancies recorded during vaccine trials, 234 ended in miscarriage. Even among the remaining 36 cases of full-term pregnancies, 80% ended in the death of the baby. Pfizer knew all this. This is the intentional annihilation of people. Genocide on a planetary scale.

The 36 reports published in the book (though Naomi Wolf's website lists 102) document cases of miscarriage, premature birth and serious dysfunction in newborns and infants exposed to breast milk. It is also noted that approximately 70% of adverse events related to the Pfizer vaccine occur in women. Furthermore, newborns and children under the age of twelve who received the Pfizer vaccine have experienced heart attacks, facial paralysis and kidney damage and failure.

Alongside this, the most powerful campaign of censorship and repression in human history has been launched, and many volunteer scientists have suffered ostracism, job loss and marginalisation as a result of their commitment to true science.

They have all been silenced and classified under the derogatory heading 'anti-vax' by the system's anecdotal evidence. This defamatory accusation waters down the debate, demeans the commitment to truth, and fuels media and opinion leaders to justify any repressive action against those who dare to reveal the truth.

It is no coincidence that, among the various epithets with which they wanted to classify him, Charlie Kirk was also accused of being an 'anti-vaxxer', as if this were enough to justify any kind of punishment. Even paying for one's ideas with one's life. Or being silenced in the silence of those who reduce the truth to second-hand opinion with contempt. They are good for nothing but fuelling hate campaigns, which, as we have seen in Ohio, can also explode.
